

It seems like common sense, if you advertise when everyone else stops marketing...

- 1.) Your message is more likely to be noticed due to fewer ads in the market
- 2.) Your business is more likely to be remembered when everyone starts advertising again

It is common sense but yet every recession one of the first things companies do is pull back on their marketing and advertising.

During the current economic downturn you have an incredible opportunity to INCREASE SALES and BUILD MARKETSHARE. But don't take my word for it ... there's almost a century of proof to back up common sense. Here's a quick summary:

1990's – A MarketSense study concluded the best strategy for coping with a recession is balanced long-term branding with promotion for short term sales. The study shows brands like Jif and Kraft Salad Dressing experienced sales growth of 57% and 70% respectively after increasing their advertising during the recession.

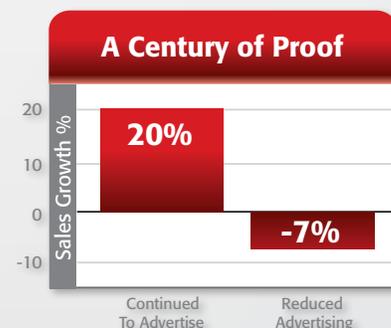

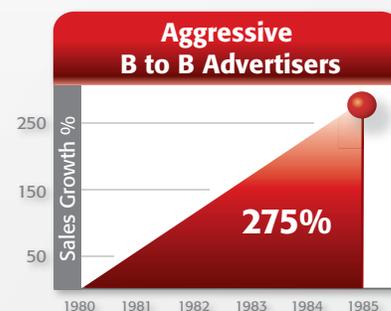

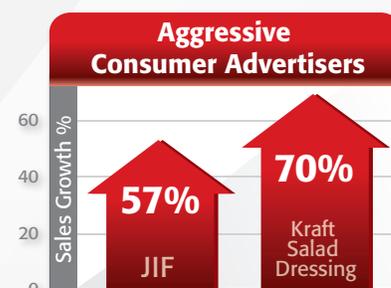

1980's – McGraw-Hill Research analyzed 600 B2B companies and found that those who maintained or increased advertising grew significantly ... both during the recession and the following three years. In fact, by 1985, sales of companies that advertised aggressively had grown 275% over those that didn't.

1970's – An American Business Press study showed that companies who advertise and market aggressively can maintain and increase sales during a recession and in the following years.

1940's, 50's, 60's – Buchen Advertising tracked advertising dollars vs. sales trends for the recessions of 1949, 1954, 1958 and 1961. They found that sales and profits dropped at companies that cut back on advertising and, that after the recession had ended, those same companies lagged behind the ones that maintained their ad budgets.

1920's – Advertising executive Roland S. Vaile tracked 200 companies through the recession of 1923. He reported in the April, 1927 issue of the Harvard Business Review that companies that had continued to advertise during the economic downturn were 20% ahead of where they had been before the recession, while companies that reduced advertising were still in the recession, 7% below their 1920 levels.

Frankenberger and Graham, two Oregon professors, studied 2,662 firms over 16,000+ 'firm years' (1970 – 1991) to determine the effect of advertising on a company during a recession. The results? Firms that advertised during a recession increased in value and got more marketing bang for their buck ... in some cases for up to three years after the recession had ended.

Here's why promotional products deliver the best return on investment in an unsettled economy and why they should be a vital part of your marketing mix.

- Increased sales. 62% of customers do business with the company after receiving the promotional product.
- Brand awareness. 84% of customers remember the business that provided them with the promotional product.
- Return on investment. At $.004/ impression promotional products have the best CPI of popular advertising media.
- Improved relations. 42% of customers view the business more favorably after receiving the item and virtually none indicate a negative feeling.
- Frequency and repetition. A key to advertising, promotional products are kept on average for 7 months and many are used every business day!

“ I have yet to see any study that proves timidity is the route to success. Studies consistently have proven that companies that have the intelligence and guts to maintain or increase their overall marketing and advertising efforts in times of business downturns will get the edge on their timid competitors. ”
